Program Description:

TalkMail 2.0 is a secure voice email client designed to be easy to use for any basic PC user. The program allows users to instantly send up to one hour long voice messages for free, in high fidelity sound, to any email address, or distribution list, anywhere in the world. Given the nature of this medium, many people can talk simultaneously in the same message, and background music, or sound effects can be recorded, and your picture and attachments can also be included. Distribution lists can also be used for work, advertising, parties, sports, or events.

It is also relevant to mention, that TalkMail does not present typical communication problems associated with cell phones, like dropped calls, fees, or low quality sound. Additionally, using this program does not expose you to any of the broadly known harmful health risks associated to exposure to electromagnetic fields when you use cell phones, or to traffic accidents while driving.

While the real time communication offered by standard land line phones is highly beneficial, TalkMail allows you to reduce to some extent your landline phone bill, if you use it when appropriate, for some of your communications, because it is free. Also, when using common PC settings, the sound quality is superior and more realistic when comparing TalkMail to a conventional phone landline.

TalkMail is secure, because it allows you to send your messages to the Internet through your own mail server using SSL encryption, as opposed to using voice calling offered by large web mail and search providers, going through their own corporate servers.

TalkMail works with any free or fee based email address offering the popular POP3 service. Occasionally, but rarely, some free email providers would charge a fee for POP3.
